CRITICAL LANGUAGE PROGRAM (BACKGROUND)

The Critical Language Program is offered through the College of Humanities and Social Sciences. The director, Dr. Victor Drescher, is a member of the Department of Spanish and Classical Languages.

Critical Languages courses are self-instructional courses for the study of languages not otherwise available at IUP. Students are provided with texts, cassettes, and the services of a native speaker. Professional teachers of language from other universities test performance.

CRITICAL LANGUAGES. Number Change.

CURRENT SITUATION.

The Critical Language Program offers a number of different languages under four course numbers--one for each level of study. Specific languages are distinguished only by section numbers which vary from semester to semester depending on the number of languages being offered.

- CL 491 [Critical Languages I]
- CL 492 [Critical Languages II]
- CL 493 [Critical Languages III]
- CL 494 [Critical Languages IV]

As an example, during Spring 1993, the following are offered:

- | | |
|------------|---------------|
| CL 492/001 | Chinese II |
| CL 492/002 | Japanese II |
| CL 492/003 | Italian II |
| CL 492/004 | Portuguese II |
| CL 492/005 | Russian II |

REASONS FOR CHANGE:

- (1) Beginning level courses are misnumbered in the 490's; beginning courses (I and II) should be in the 100's and the second year of study (III and IV) in the 200's.
- (2) Giving each language a separate course number, rather than a section number only, enables the conversion to computerized degree audit. Because the computer will distinguish by course number, this change will allow us to keep the specific languages separate and to code some languages for non-Western credit.

CONDITION OF CHANGE:

The listing of numbers below includes all those which have been offered over the last few years and makes a best judgment about those likely to be offered in the foreseeable future. The new numbering system will retain, however, the Critical Languages' existing Senate authorization to offer other languages that are part of the program when the need arises. The sequence of numbers can be extended by Academic Information Systems at the request of the director of critical languages to accommodate the additional offerings. As long as the added language is part of the Critical Languages Program, it is not considered a new course proposal needing Senate approval.
