Accomplish the next step toward earning your master's in educational psychology.

PROGRAM HIGHLIGHTS

Master the study of the social, cognitive, emotional, and educational development of children and young adults with this one-year (fall, spring, summer) Master of Education degree program in Educational and School Psychology.

- Relevant—All students start as a cohort group in the fall and graduate at the end of summer - a great way to develop relationships with your peers.
- Supportive— Faculty are committed to your success.
- Inclusive—Applicants holding a bachelor's degree in a closely related field can also apply.
- Field-ready - As a student, you will: Discover instructional methods and cognitive and behavioral theories of learning, gain a broad theoretical and practical background in the areas of education and psychology, broaden your understanding of human development and learning, and learn about educational evaluation, research and how to develop evidence-based interventions.

CAREER OUTCOMES

While designed for students who plan to pursue certification in school psychology after the master's degree, this program is also for those who want to take on entry-level professional careers as practitioners or administrators.

"The program here allowed me to take advantage of opportunities I never expected to be within my reach as a graduate student. I have been able to develop professional relationships with all of the professors, publish work, attend conferences, and present on various topics" – Adrienne Bardo, MEd, Graduate Assistant School Psychology PhD Student.
